When commissioning its design, the objective was to create an attractive armchair that included an invisible relaxation function. Technically, this made it a difficult assignment. As a result, a new technical process was conceived operating according to fundamental principles that differ from those seen in the usual systems. A patent is pending for this. Using two simple cords on either side, the functions for the backrest and feet are provided with support using pressure cylinders. The main support has an integrated mechanism. The relaxation function is fully adjustable according to body length or sleep requirements. The flexible main support can be used to choose between an active or passive posture.

The result is a luxury-edition armchair that is first and foremost attractive and can be supplied either with or without a relaxation function. The various components are individually upholstered and can be furnished in a variety of colours and materials according to a set variation. This makes Marvin unique in its class!
